The Quest for Authentic Manhood is more than just a study title. It describes the very hopes—and challenges—we have as Christian men. In it, the first of the Men's Fraternity curriculum series, author Robert Lewis tells the story of going mountain climbing with his son.

As they edged higher, they came to a narrow ledge. There, high above the rocks below, Lewis came to a very real and immediate understanding of how foolish it would be to cut the rope that bound him to his son and their guide. How hopeless it would be for him to try to do it alone.

Pastor Lewis began Men's Fraternity with a core group of 30 men in his Little Rock church. Today, nearly 1400 men gather at 6 a.m. each Tuesday to participate.
